Historical Note

The Research Center for the Americas (RCA) (previously the Chicano Latino Research Center, CLRC) was founded in 1992 by Pedro Castillo and Norma Klahn, faculty in the History and Literature Departments with ties to (what was then) the Program in Latin American Studies. The RCA has helped make UC Santa Cruz a vibrant hub for Latin American, Latino, and migration studies. Drawing from and bringing together the social sciences, humanities, and arts the CLRC explores the diversity of the Americas, with a focus on the mobility of people, ideas, and commodities.

The mission of the RCA is to support Latin American, Latino, and migration studies at UC Santa Cruz. To do so, it has awarded research fellowships and grants to UC Santa Cruz faculty and students; supported research clusters comprised of UC Santa Cruz faculty and students; sponsored conferences, institutes, lectures, workshops, and film screenings; published working papers and reports; and hosted visiting scholars.

Scope and Content

The records of the RCA highlight the productive potential of cross-border perspectives linking the Americas and the evolution of the fields of Latin American and Latino studies. The collection includes a variety of materials ranging from posters and flyers to VHS and cassette tapes.

Undergraduate Research Apprenticeship Program Series 4 2000-2012

Scope and Content

Includes materials documenting the evolution of the URAP program. Established in 2000, URAP seeks to inspire promising and driven undergraduates to pursue graduate and professional studies while bolstering faculty and graduate student research. Apprentices gain hands-on research experience by working closely with the faculty on a project related to Chicano, Latino, Latin American, and/or migration studies while the sponsoring faculty receive research support. URAP allows undergraduate students a unique opportunity to learn about the research process while receiving professional guidance and building skills necessary for academic and professional success.
